

Integrating Public Health Into Community Design Training

Training Goals

Participants will:

- Improve their knowledge of land use and transportation planning policies
- Understand the public health sector's role and strategies for working with local planning and transportation agencies
- Be able to engage in the local land use decision-making process to create safer, healthier community environments
- Understand how to organize and build the capacity of their agencies to address built environment issues

Facilitator

Tina Zenzola, MPH, is the Director for Safe and Healthy Communities Consulting, an organization dedicated to creating healthy community environments by re-introducing public health as a priority in land use and transportation planning decisions. For over ten years, Ms. Zenzola has trained and worked with public health and community design professionals - in California and nationally - helping them bring the public health message to local planning processes. She has authored national reports and tools on healthy community design and has consulted with NACCHO, APA, STIPDA, and state and local public health and planning agencies across the country.

This training is sponsored by the California Department of Health Services', California Center for Physical Activity and the Fresno County Department of Community Health.

Safe & Healthy Communities Consulting will conduct this one day workshop designed specifically for public health agencies and their community partners. Participants will be introduced to a menu of approaches and a "how to" for the public health sector to engage in and affect the community design process.
